By ABRAHAM RABINOVICH
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The cabinet decided yesterday to evict the Gush Emunim settlers who set up a makeshift settlement on a hilltop near Nablus Monday night in defiance of the Camp David accord.

Meeting as the Ministerial Defence Committee, the cabinet issued a brief statement declaring the government's intention to remove the one set up near Nablus and to prevent future illegal settlements.

The one-hour meeting was held shortly after the return of Defence Minister Ezer Weizman and Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan from the U.S.

All of Judea and Samaria was closed off to Israeli vehicles last night and security forces were placed on full alert, following the cabinet decision. Army troops surrounded the hilltop but made no further move, awaiting instructions.

Residents of Kiryat Arba, the Jewish quarter of Hebron, took to the streets last night to protest a curfew imposed on the settlement. Army and Border Police reinforcements were ordered off Kiryat Arba and Ma'aleh Adumim, on the Jerusalem-Jericho road, to prevent their residents from reaching the quarters of Eilon Moreh. The troops said only sick people and women in labour would be allowed to leave.

The Kiryat Arba residents were particularly incensed when soldiers barred the path of the regular 9:30 p.m. Egged bus to Jerusalem. It is reported that some residents let the air out of the tires of military vehicles and others cut the security fence in attempts to get out of the settlement.

The settlement attempt began Monday night after a protest meeting called by Gush Emunim in the settlement of Kaddum, northwest of Nablus. Gush Emunim leader Hanan Porat said that for every settlement taken down by the government, 10 more would be established.

Following the meeting, participants drove to the settlement site, about four kilometres south of Nablus. They found supplies, including a generator and tents, waiting in trucks.

The Gush Emunim members hauled the supplies by foot to the settlement site, an hour's hike from the road.

A Gush Emunim leader, Gershon Shafat, said yesterday that 200 persons were camped on the site. "I hope the army won't attempt to remove them by force," he said. "It wouldn't be easy for the army if it tried."

Because of the distance from the road, the evacuation of the Gush Emunim squatters against their will would be a difficult task. Observers speculated that the army might attempt to use helicopters, but that would also be difficult in the hilly terrain. A light army plane was seen flying over the area during the day, apparently taking photographs.

Shafat said the site had been designated for future settlement both by Gush Emunim and by the government.

"Settling here was just a matter of timing, and timing is something you can argue about. We hope the settlement will be large and flourishing," Gush Emunim has named the site Eilon Moreh after the biblical settlement of the same name believed to have existed there.

The initial group which set up camp Monday night was the garin (settlement nucleus) that was awaiting government approval for the site, according to Shafat. They were joined by supporters during the day.

The original Gush Emunim settlement in Samaria, Kaddum, was settled by a garin which had intended to settle at Eilon Moreh.

West Bank activists planning joint stand

Jerusalem Post Reporter

West Bank political activists yesterday launched behind-the-scenes consultations in an apparent effort to formulate a unified position on the Camp David accords concerning the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

This is the first time that leaders in the two territories have initiated discussions of a proposed peace formula. In the past they reluctantly avoided engaging in such discussions, usually claiming that any political debate should be referred to the Palestine Liberation Organization, which — according to the Rabat Arab summit in 1974 — is the "sole" representative of the Palestinians.

The consultations so far have been at individual meetings, where experienced lawyers interpreted the West Bank and Gaza formulas in the Camp David declarations.

A suggestion by a prominent jurist to summon West Bank and Gaza notables to a parley was turned down by several West Bank leaders. The latter prefer to await word from King Hussein, since they feel they are linked to Jordan under the Camp David conclusions. West Bank leaders are planning to dispatch a delegation soon to Amman.

Jordan, meanwhile, indicated last night that it will seek clarifications from visiting U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance.

Saudi Arabia and Jordan reject Camp David accords

Post Middle East Editor

Saudi Arabia and Jordan last night dealt a heavy blow to hopes arising out of the Camp David summit, when both countries rejected the peace proposals formulated by President Anwar Sadat, Premier Menachem Begin and President Jimmy Carter.

But the Saudis and Jordanians nevertheless appeared to have left doors open for negotiating changes in the proposals affecting the West Bank and Gaza and the Golan Heights.

The Saudi and Jordanian moves came on the eve of a visit to the two countries by U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, who is also scheduled to go to Syria. The latter country has rejected the Camp David peace proposals outright, which Damascus sees as amounting to a separate Israel-Egyptian pact effectively settling the conflict between the two countries over Sinai.

Saudi Arabia, Jordan and Syria all held emergency cabinet sessions yesterday, under the chairmanship of their respective heads of state. Syria's President Assad earlier in the day talked on the telephone to King Hussein of Jordan, and Hussein talked to Saudi Crown Prince Fahd.

While labelling the Camp David formula "unacceptable," the Saudis maintained that they had no right to criticize the bilateral deal Sadat struck with Israel over Sinai, because they are not entitled to interfere in the internal affairs of any Arab country or to oppose its right to regain its lost territory by war or peace.

But the Jordanians hinted that they saw the Egyptian move as a separatist act which "could weaken" the position of other Arab parties still in conflict with Israel. In an official statement issued after their three-hour cabinet session, the Jordanians denied any commitment to the Camp David peace formula, especially to resolutions which called on Amman to join negotiations.

"Jordan is not obliged morally or materially" by the Camp David peace declarations, the statement said.

The Jordanians however, pledged to launch consultations on Arab and international levels to clarify the situation relating to the Camp David resolutions over non-Egyptian territories in conflict with Israel.

The Jordanian statement reiterated Amman's firm demands for Israeli withdrawal to the 1967 war frontiers, self-determination in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip and the restoration of Arab sovereignty over East Jerusalem. The Saudis also aligned themselves with these demands, and indications were that the Jordanians and the Saudis see a positive response to them as a prerequisite to accepting the Camp David resolutions, particularly those concerning projected autonomy for the West Bank and Gaza.

The Saudi and Jordanian failure to support the Camp David peace declarations is not regarded as likely to affect the peace pact that Egypt and Israel have pledged to conclude within three months. It is, however, bound to influence negotiations over the West Bank and Gaza, where local people would be less than enthusiastic to initiate moves not approved by other neighbouring countries besides Egypt.

Sadat praises autonomy plan for W. Bank Palestinians

By WOLF BLITZER

WASHINGTON. — The proposed autonomy scheme on the West Bank and Gaza Strip is "very promising" and Palestinians living there would be wise to accept it, President Sadat said yesterday.

Speaking before closed sessions of the Senate Foreign Relations and House International Relations Committees, the Egyptian leader listed the "achievements" for the Palestinians in the "framework" agreement signed with Israel on Sunday.

Specifically, Sadat referred to Israel's willingness to dismantle the military government in the West Bank, withdraw its military forces from the populated areas to "specified security locations," and allow the Palestinians to establish their own self-governing "authority" through free elections.

U.S. officials have similarly been pointing to the "gains" for the Palestinians in the agreement, (Continued on page 2, col. 5)

Begin: IDF in West Bank forever

By DAVID LANDAU and WOLF BLITZER
Jerusalem Post Correspondents

WASHINGTON. — Israeli troops will remain on the West Bank, in specified locations, forever, Prime Minister Menachem Begin told the House of Representative Foreign Relations Committee yesterday.

Asked about final borders on the West Bank and Gaza, Begin told the congressmen that these would be negotiated in the four-party talks set up under the Camp David "framework for peace" agreement.

Begin stressed that Israel had not given up its right to claim sovereignty over the West Bank. It would exercise that right if the issue came up for negotiation in the future, he said.

A number of the lawmakers seemed perturbed that Begin chose to express this position so forcefully. Said one well-placed American observer: "Begin is hurting President Jimmy Carter every time he makes such statements."

Begin revealed that Egyptian President Anwar Sadat had pressed at the Camp David summit for some Arab flag to fly over the Moslem section of Jerusalem, but Israel had rejected the demand. He indicated, though, that there could be further negotiations regarding a pennant — though apparently not that of an Arab state — to be flown over the sites holy to Islam in the city.

Begin and Sadat appeared separately yesterday morning before the foreign relations committees of both the Senate and the House. As their paths crossed — Sadat from the Senate body en route to the House committee, and Begin going in the opposite direction — the two leaders met in the corridor of the Capitol and hugged warmly.

Both men appeared before a joint session of Congress on Monday night, and the warm reception that they received from the U.S. legislators was compared to that given Winston Churchill when he stood before both houses of Congress after World War II. (Text of Carter's speech, back page.)

The assessment of the reception came from House Speaker Thomas "Tip" O'Neill, who offered to Sadat while welcoming him to the session of the House Foreign Relations Committee.

O'Neill said that in his own 26 years of congressional experience he could

Begin confident he can overcome opposition to peace agreement

By WOLF BLITZER

WASHINGTON. — Prime Minister Menachem Begin has confidently predicted that he will overcome any opposition from right-wing members of his own Herut party and the Gush Emunim to Israel's concessions made during the Camp David summit.

"Leave it to me," he told The Jerusalem Post during a brief interview. "If we have a debate, it will be among friends."

Begin, sounding very pleased by the two "framework" agreements signed with Egypt, acknowledged that some hard-liners in Israel may not be pleased by all the positions accepted by Israel during the talks.

But he was adamant that the overall thrust of the agreement was in Israel's best interest.

On another matter, Begin appeared relieved by the overnight improvement in American-Israeli relations. He noted that ties with Washington had been strained during and after his "tough" talks with President Jimmy Carter here in March.

Begin said that the Carter administration's efforts to improve relations with Israel, following the unpleasant aftermath of those talks, began in late June with the visit of Vice-President Walter Mondale to Israel.

"I came to improve relations," Begin quoted Mondale as having said shortly after arriving in Israel. The Mondale visit was "very important" in easing the strains, he added. Until the vice-president arrived, Begin had been very upset by what he feared was a "campaign" against the Israel government, and himself personally, by the "powerful" American media.

"We didn't have the means to overcome that campaign," Begin said. "They have tremendous power."

He recalled that one unnamed U.S. official had specifically called him "an obstacle to peace," suggesting that Begin should be removed from office. The prime minister said he did not know who that official was. Senior American officials have repeatedly denied that any responsible policy-maker had ever made such an assertion.

But Begin disclosed for the first time that he had written a personal letter to Carter expressing his concern over this "campaign."

"We had some difficult days," Begin continued. "But I knew all along that the truth would prevail."

The prime minister looked healthy and strong during the conversation, which took place in his Washington Hilton hotel suite. But he was understandably tired by the ordeal of the two-week summit. He said that he had "almost like a baby" Sunday night after returning to the hotel from the White House, where he signed the agreements together with Presidents Anwar Sadat and Carter. The prime minister was flying last night to New York to meet with American Jewish leaders, business representatives and others before returning to Israel. He is due to arrive at Ben-Gurion Airport on Friday.

During his stay here in Washington, Begin also met individually with several senators, including Edward Kennedy, Clifford Case, Jacob Javits, Henry Jackson, Frank Church and Richard Stone.

WASHINGTON. — President Anwar Sadat yesterday told the U.S. Congress that should the Jordanians stay out, Egypt would still sign the Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty within three months. But he stated that he still expects Jordan to enter the peace negotiations.

In the event of Jordan staying out, Sadat promised that Egypt would also go ahead, together with Israel and Palestinian representatives, in the negotiations for setting up the West Bank self-government, as called for in the "framework" agreement.

Sadat was answering questions during a closed-door session of the House International Relations Committee. The Egyptian leader, who was very warmly received by the members, said that he "fully expects" Jordan and Saudi Arabia to support the agreements because the pacts do not "forfeit" Arab sovereignty or land.

Sadat spoke several hours before word came from Riyadh of Saudi Arabia's official disapproval of the Camp David accords — or at least of the "framework for peace" accord.

Bolstering Sadat's positive prognosis regarding Jordan, a top Egyptian official disclosed to The Jerusalem Post that Jordan had "reacted well" to the agreements reached between Israel and Egypt at Camp David.

Hassan Kamel, head of the president's bureau and one of the two or three men closest to Sadat, told The Jerusalem Post that Egypt was gratified at the fact that the U.S. administration obviously intends to exercise prompt and forthright efforts of persuasion upon both Jordan and Saudi Arabia that they support the Camp David agreements. He revealed that the Saudis had been "very encouraging" in their talks with President Sadat just before the Camp David summit, and he seemed hopeful of continued Saudi support and encouragement now.

As regards the Saudi thumbs down, Kamel said: "Not to worry. This is just until Vance comes and explains the Camp David agreement to them. I think they'll be convinced."

"The U.S. has undertaken a responsibility in this," Kamel added. He compared the initial, negative Saudi Arabian reaction to the Camp David "framework for peace" to their reaction to Sadat's trip to Jerusalem 10 months ago.

"They couldn't absorb it at first," Kamel said. "But later, when it was all explained to them, they found it reasonable."

Secretary of State Cyrus Vance was to leave Washington last night on a mission to Amman, Riyadh and Damascus, to discuss the Camp David agreements with the rulers of Jordan, Saudi Arabia and Syria.

A U.S. official who will be travelling with Vance said the purpose of the mission would be to "fully inform" the three countries of the "serious purpose" of the summit accords, and to ensure that their final decision whether to support the accords be based on full and accurate information. He said the U.S. was not pressing the Jordanians and the Saudis to decide at once, but rather, to study the facts and decide after weighing the important advantages which, in the American view, the Camp David agreements give to the Arab cause.

"(The accords) offer the Palestinians the opportunity to begin moving in the direction they've indicated they want to move in — within the framework of Israel's security considerations," the official said.

When Premier Begin flew out of Andrews Air Force Base for New York close to midnight last night (Israel time), the letters were still not ready for signing, despite American officials' earlier hopes that the negotiations over formulating them would be completed by then.

Carter's standing improves among U.S. Jewish leaders

By WOLF BLITZER
and DAVID LANDAU
Jerusalem Post Correspondents

WASHINGTON. — President Jimmy Carter's successful mediation of the Israeli-Egyptian peace agreements has dramatically improved his standing among the American Jewish leadership.

This became clear yesterday following President Carter's meeting with six prominent Jewish leaders at the White House. They had been called in to receive a briefing on the Camp David summit by Vice-President Walter Mondale, but Carter spent nearly half-an-hour with the group.

Many of the most active Jewish leaders were invited by Vice-President Walter Mondale to a private reception on Monday evening, immediately following President Carter's address before a joint session of the Congress.

The reception at the vice-president's official residence was attended by senior U.S. officials involved in the two-week summit negotiation as well as other top aides to the president.

According to several Jewish leaders who were there, the strained relations between the community and the White House of the past several months appear to have eased considerably.

Specifically, the Jewish leaders said, Carter's standing among Jews has been helped by the praise heaped on the president by Prime Minister Begin, who has been taking every opportunity in his public statements to hail Carter and the other American officials involved in the talks. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance has also been especially singled out for praise by Begin.

White House officials are clearly hoping that the peace agreements will end "once and for all" the period of mutual recriminations between the administration and the Jewish community.

Among the political leaders in the White House there is a widespread hope that Jewish political activists and fundraisers will now once again return to the Democratic party. Ever since relations between Washington and Jerusalem worsened last year, there has been a substantial reduction in Jewish support for the president and the Democratic party.

'Glorious victory,' says Egypt cabinet

Egypt's 30-man cabinet yesterday expressed full support for President Anwar Sadat and described his agreement with Israel at Camp David as Egypt's "most glorious victory in its contemporary history."

Alignment wants 'package deal' vote

The Alignment yesterday demanded a single Knesset debate on the Camp David peace agreement and the future of the Sinai settlements. It warned that if two separate debates are held, it may decide not to participate in the vote on the settlements.

Uri Baran, acting head of the Alignment Knesset faction, wrote a letter to this effect yesterday to coalition chairman Haim Corfu.

The first special Knesset session to hear the government's statement on the framework agreement with Egypt has been set for Monday at 10 a.m. Just before the session, the House Committee will decide on the length of the debate, which presumably will be followed by a vote.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin, in his appearance on Israel Television Monday night, declined to state his own position on whether the Rafiah settlements should be dismantled. He said he might even refrain from participating in the Knesset debate on the subject, in order not to influence Knesset members.

But Baran sees in this a tactic by Begin to avoid the wrath of the settlers and let the Alignment do his dirty work.

Baran wrote in his letter that the Alignment sees the future of the Sinai settlements as an integral part of the overall agreement. It is inconceivable, he says, that the government should adopt a "neutral" position on the settlements and impose the responsibility on the Knesset without taking a clear stand of its own.

"You undoubtedly know that the tendency among the majority of the faction is to support the proposed agreement, and there is no reason to set up artificial difficulties," the letter concludes.

Corfu said he had not received the letter. He added that the information about two separate Knesset debates had not reached him from any authoritative source.

Nevertheless, he said, he saw no logic in the Alignment's demand. If the government preferred a separate debate on dismantling the settlements, that could only weaken its own position. Instead of presenting the Knesset with an ultimatum on the settlements, the Knesset would now have an opportunity to discuss that question separately, thus giving its decision greater moral weight.

According to a senior Knesset official, the request for a special Knesset session for a government statement "on the framework agreement with Egypt" came from Yehiel Kadishai, the prime minister's bureau chief, who was at Camp David.

The government has not yet requested a second Knesset session, to be devoted to the settlements, although Kadishai is understood to have implied that it might.

The Independent Liberals yesterday announced their view that although the Sinai settlements were established in accordance with the government's instructions and filled an important political and security function, their future must be determined by supreme considerations of state.

Nevertheless, ILP Knesset Member Gideon Hausner told The Jerusalem Post, a supreme effort should be made even at this late hour to reach an agreement on an exchange of territories so that the Sinai settlements, or at least part of them, might remain.

The ILP, Hausner said, now sees the main points of its own programme being implemented by the Likud government.

Rabin tells Jerusalem forum: Can't back settlement removal if separated from peace vote

By DAVID RICHARDSON
Jerusalem Post Reporter

"If the choice before the Knesset is dismantling the Sinai settlements or cancelling the two agreements achieved at Camp David, I will support the government," said former prime minister Yitzhak Rabin. He was speaking at the monthly luncheon of the Jerusalem Economic Club, which was held yesterday under the patronage of Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek.

Rabin stressed, however, that if the government separated the discussion of the two issues and did not present the achievement of peace with Egypt together with the price Israel is asked to pay — he would not attend the second discussion and would not vote for dismantling the settlements. "I will not be able to vote for the removal of the settlements in Sinai if it is not part of the achievement of peace at Camp David," he said.

Speaking forcefully, the former prime minister, who called the agreements "a painful compromise for both sides," said the success of Camp David was undoubtedly a tremendous achievement and opened opportunities for peace in the Middle East. While there were also significant risks involved, there was no agreement without some risk. He indicated that the price paid to Egypt — and Egypt had achieved all it wanted, he said — was necessary since Egypt was the key to the peace process between Israel and the Arab states.

The former prime minister saw some overlap in timing between the two agreements and indicated that this could make implementation of a part of one agreement conditional on action in the other. For this reason he counselled restraint, both in criticism and in the establishment of settlements. "I will support the government if it displays patience and strengthens the existing settlements in the Jordan Valley and at Gush Etzion, rather than running to Karmel Shomron or the kind of settlement established on Monday night," he said.

Mayor Kollek called on the government to make an all-out effort to strengthen Jerusalem, especially by increasing Jewish settlement in the city.

He also called on the citizens of Jerusalem to greet Prime Minister Begin on his arrival at the entrance to the city on Friday.

Suspects held in Ramallah killings

By ZVI ARENSTEIN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

RAMALLAH (Itim). — The alleged perpetrators of a string of political murders on the West Bank, including the man nicknamed the "blond killer," have been apprehended by security forces during the past week. A long list of future potential victims was found in the possession of the alleged "blond killer," who, according to eyewitnesses, carried out his "hits" with a pistol equipped with a silencer.

The members of the cell are said to belong to the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, led by George Habash. They all live in the village of Silwad, near Ramallah.

Among the political killings of so-called "collaborators" attributed to the cell are those of a Silwad cafe proprietor on December 1 last year. Ramallah notable Selim el-Asmar two days later; former head of the military government education department in Ramallah, Hamdi el Kadi, on December 27; and former Ramallah city councillor Abdul-Nur Khalil Jandu, one of the town's leading notables, on February 3 this year.

Security sources told Itim that the cell members are suspected of three other attempted murders.

TEL AVIV. — Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan told United Jewish Appeal donors at the Dan Hotel last night that he will be proud of the accomplishments of the Camp David summit, even if the people of Israel decide to reject them.

"If the majority of the people reject this settlement, they will have to do so with the knowledge of what it means," he said. "They will have to be ready to fight to keep the piece of land in the Sinai."

Dayan continued: "We want peace, but we are ready to accept this rejection and everything concerned with it and commit ourselves to meet all the difficulties involved."

Settlement movements worry about withdrawal demands

Jerusalem Post Staff

TEL AVIV. — Most of the settlement movements voiced unease yesterday at the demands for dismantling settlements contained in the Camp David accords. Only Hashomer Hatzair's Kibbutz Arzi expressed support; but this, too, was qualified by the feeling that the "price for peace" was "heavy."

Yisrael Galili, former Labour cabinet minister, speaking at a meeting of the Kibbutz Meuhad secretariat attended by representatives of the movement's settlements in the Golan and the Jordan Valley, said that the prospects of the prevention of war in the agreements were accompanied by "terrible risks": abandoning a defensible border with Egypt, opening the door to a Palestinian state, and a return to the pre-1967 borders with Jordan. The Sinai agreement was a "fatal mistake" and constitutes a clear precedent for concessions in the Jordan Valley and the Golan, Galili said. Clear lines of recall no similarly enthusiastic reception by the legislators. He had consulted with veterans going back even further than himself, and they had referred to the historic Churchill visit as the only analogous instance.

"It echoed the sentiments of all the American people," O'Neil assured the Egyptian leader. "Congress and the American people are behind you all the way."

Sadat, in his opening remarks to the committee, said the process that had been "crucial" by success at Camp David had in fact started back in November 1973, when he received then-Secretary of State Henry Kissinger in Cairo for the first time.

He himself had pledged back in February when he last addressed the House committee, "never to let the American people down" — and by the Camp David agreements he had fulfilled his promise. The agreements will "usher in a completely new era in the history of our region," Sadat said.

The agreements will "enable us to end the suffering and the bitterness," said Sadat.

The congressmen stood and applauded, as their colleagues in the Senate's Foreign Relations committee had done earlier. They then went into closed-door session to question Sadat on details of the agreement.

tomorrow in New York, before returning home on Friday. An Israeli official said just before boarding the plane with Begin that the letters will have to be signed in New York — "or if not, then in Jerusalem."

The most problematic of the letters was apparently the one embodying Israel's pledge to desist from establishing new settlements for the immediate future. Begin has stated that this commitment extends only over the coming three months, the period during which he and Sadat have promised to finalize the Egypt-Israel peace treaty and during which the hope is to set up the self-governing autonomy on the West Bank. The premier has denied categorically that the commitment covers the entire five-year interim period.

The Egyptians, and the Americans too, apparently did not want any deadline for the termination of the commitment to be included in the letter.

The other letters concern the status of Jerusalem — on which Israel and Egypt are totally at odds — and the American undertaking to build Israel two new military airfields in the Negev instead of those to be given up in Sinai.

The immediate next step, according to the U.S. official, once the letters are formulated and exchanged, will be to decide on the modalities of upcoming Israel-Egypt negotiations. No venue has been set, but one Egyptian newspaper yesterday predicted the site would be Ismailiya. The U.S. official said there would be Israeli and Egyptian military men in the talks, who would determine the precise delineation of the various zones on the map of Sinai.

The military men would also discuss the delicate and different forms of monitoring in the Sinai.

The U.S. official said American military experts would also attend these talks "if we are invited." He indicated the U.S. expects to be invited, citing the provision in the "framework for peace" which says that "the United States shall be invited to participate in the talks on matters related to modalities of the implementation of the agreements and working out the timetable for the carrying out of the obligations of the parties."

Inflation likely to rise with peace — treasury

By SHLOMO MAOZ
Jerusalem Post Economic Reporter

Senior treasury officials contemplating the possible economic results of peace with Egypt are concerned about a likely increase in inflation and the potentially negative consequences of a large influx of cheap labour from the neighbouring states into the economy. And Finance Ministry Director-General Amram Sivan told The Jerusalem Post yesterday that Israel, including the government, will have to tighten its belts in the first years of peace.

Bank of Israel and treasury economic circles told The Post yesterday that domestic expenditure would increase as a result of an agreement with Egypt. The transfer of air force bases from Sinai to the Negev will cost $500m., according to U.S. media estimates. This increase in expenditure means that inflation will at least remain at the current level, despite the government's plan to curtail its growth next year — and it is likely to increase.

Sivan estimated that Israel would lose $200m.-$300m. a year in revenue from the Sinai oilfields.

Sivan, who leaves for the U.S. tomorrow to participate in the International Monetary Fund meeting, told The Post that the treasury has already begun to discuss the economic implications of the latest political developments with the Defence Ministry. One immediate result is that the treasury's outline of its plans for the economy for next fiscal year — including the budget framework — is being extensively redrafted, and this means the cabinet's economic debate will be postponed until well after the holidays.

While in the U.S. Sivan will be discussing aid with administration officials. U.S. aid to Israel this year was $1,188m., of which $1,000m. was military aid. For next year, on current projections, is set to be $1,602m., with the military component remaining stable.

Finance Minister Ehrlich, who will also be in the U.S. for the IMF meeting, had delayed his departure for a few days in order to be in Israel for the government discussion of the Camp David accords when Prime Minister Begin returns. Ehrlich will speak to the UJA in Miami, and this is being seen as a test of U.S. Jewry's reaction to the accords. The feeling in some treasury circles here is that U.S. Jews tend to be bigger donors when Israel is facing difficulties, and they foresee the possibility of lost revenue.

A research project being carried out at the treasury shows that trade between Egypt and Israel will probably be limited in its scope in the initial years after peace comes. The research indicates that initially Israel would be in a position to export goods to Egypt worth $80m.-100m. annually, while Egypt would be able to sell goods to Israel to the tune of $20m.-30m. a year — unless Israel were to buy Egyptian oil, to effect balance in trade between the two countries.

Relatively few areas of competition between the two economies exist, apart from citrus fruits, the research shows. In general, the economies tend to complement each other.

Israel could sell Egypt insecticides and chemicals, and would import agricultural produce and oil. At a later stage cooperation in tourism is foreseen.

Despite Egypt's much larger population — nearly 40 million as against Israel's 3.5 million — the output of the Egyptian economy is only 10 per cent greater than that of Israel. More than half the Egyptian economy is agricultural; and because of this, as well as the lower capita income, rapid development in trade is unlikely in the first years after an agreement is signed.

Business leaders yesterday were somewhat more optimistic about the export prospects with Egypt. Both Rami Gutt, director-general of the Israeli Export Institute, and Dov Lautman, deputy president of the Manufacturers' Association, said they were optimistic. The Export Institute began to "study the situation" as soon as news of the Camp David agreements was heard. Gutt said, and preliminary results of the study will be available in a short time.

A subject of unanimous concern among senior treasury officials is the possible flooding of the local labour market with "cheap" workers after an agreement is signed. The negative consequences of a large influx of cheap labour are already known, from the post-1967 experience of labourers from the West Bank and Gaza entering the economy, they point out. They suggest that the government will have to give the problem serious advance consideration.

Treasury officials also warned against the sort of complacency which led to the belief that the local labour market would solve the economic problems, and against a tendency to fantasize about grandiose cooperation schemes between Israel and Egypt — such as the joint development of nuclear reactors in Sinai, or channelling the Nile waters to irrigate the Sinai desert. No concrete plans for such cooperation exist, they pointed out.

Lebanese civilians hurt in terrorist attack on Klea

Jerusalem Post Reporter

METULLA. — At least 11 Lebanese soldiers and civilians from Klea were injured in a heavy artillery and Katyusha attack by terrorists yesterday. The firing began just before midnight and scores of mortar shells and Katyushas were fired at the enclave in the area.

The forces of Major Saad Haddad responded with tank and artillery fire.

The injured were evacuated from the area and brought to the "Good Fence" for treatment from Israeli Defence Forces medical teams. The two more seriously injured, one an elderly man, were transferred to Rambam Hospital in Haifa by air force helicopter. The others injured were taken by IDF and Magen David Adom ambulances to the government hospital in Safad.

The terrorist attack was described as the heaviest in the region since the Litani Campaign. It was aimed at the main street in Klea, a time of much activity, with women and children milling about, and workers employed in Israel returning home. Witnesses said a number of houses were badly damaged.

Persons receiving treatment at the "Good Fence" described the shelling as a sudden attack which found them all in the street. Most of the firing came from the direction of the Beaufort castle, where UN observers are stationed alongside terrorists.

One mother receiving treatment was slightly injured. Her three-year-old daughter's face was badly lacerated and her four-year-old son had shrapnel wounds in the legs.

Echoes of the bombardment and gun flashes could be clearly seen and heard in Metulla and throughout Galilee.

Seven people killed on roads

Jerusalem Post Staff

Seven people were killed in road accidents yesterday, six in the Negev and one in Galilee.

Sixty-eight-year-old Alexander Hiyar of Bat Yam died when his car hit an oncoming vehicle on the Arad-Beersheba road. A second man travelling in Hiyar's car, who was also killed in the collision, has not yet been identified. Also killed in this accident were Ahmed Abu Taret, 41, and Suleiman Abu Shaharab, 53. A woman passenger in their truck was badly injured and hospitalized.

Two Gaza residents died when their vehicle collided head-on with a car driven by a Beersheba man. The two have been named as Yasser Khalil and Shafiq Mandul.

Anat Naraqi, 15, of Safad was killed early yesterday morning on the Roah Pina-Tiberias road when the van in which she was a passenger hit a tractor and trailer travelling in the opposite direction. The van's driver was severely injured. (Itim) noting that Israel, for the first time, has recognized "the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people."

SADAT PRAISES

In addition, the Americans believe that the proposed Palestinian "authority" meets the basic requirements of the initial U.S. hope for a Palestinian "homeland or entity."

The Americans, recognizing Israel's clear existence to the words "homeland or entity" came up with "authority" as an acceptable alternative. Similarly, the carefully-drafted "framework" agreements avoid mention of other sensitive codewords involved in the diplomacy of the Arab-Israeli conflict. There is mention of the word "sovereignty" thus enabling both sides to insist that neither has abandoned its claim.

At the committee hearings, Sadat was bitter about the role played over recent months by the Soviet Union. He felt that the Soviets would try to torpedo the agreements, and he also expressed fear that radical Palestinian organizations might step up their terrorist attacks.

Regarding the Israeli settlements in Sinai, Sadat told the congressmen, according to participants present, that Egypt would not sign the peace treaty with Israel if the Knesset failed to accept his "prerequisite" that Israel would have to withdraw from the settlements.

Sadat is due to leave Washington today for Morocco to meet with King Hassan, an early supporter of the Egyptian peace initiative. He returns home later in the week.

10,000 bodies rotting in the heat

Iran earthquake toll hits 16,000

TABAS, Iran. — Light planes showered this earthquake-shattered town and surrounding villages with disinfectants yesterday to prevent contagion from 10,000 bodies trapped under the rubble and rotting in the heat.

The casualty toll from the giant earthquake that hit Iran Saturday night is expected to reach 16,000 dead, the Red Cross said yesterday. Officials put the quake's epicentre at the village of Korit, 24 kilometres from Tabas, and said 3,500 of its 4,000 inhabitants were either dead or injured.

In Teheran, nine people were killed when a mercy plane crashed on its way with relief supplies for thousands of survivors camping out in tents.

Authorities said the lack of water resulting from shattered irrigation pipes may force them to move survivors away from the wreckage of Tabas and its suburbs.

Communications from Tabas were still cut.

The Iranian air force supplied C-130 cargo planes and Chinook helicopters as Moslem clergymen who oppose the Shah's regime hired aircraft of their own to move out the injured and bring in supplies.

Convoys of water tankers struggled down a narrow dirt track from Mashad, the nearest large town, to Tabas, 400 kilometres away.

Quake-poisoned water from local wells was used for the required washing of the corpses before burial in shallow, hastily-dug graves in the hard dry soil.

As of late yesterday, some 8,000 bodies had been pulled out of the wreckage and buried from the estimated total of 16,000 dead.

The cloth-wrapped bodies were stretched out in rows amid the ruins of ancient Tabas, where two-thirds of the 13,000 residents were killed or injured.

The bodies, some frozen in grotesque postures of sudden death, were lined up under palm trees, wrapped in white sheets or colourful handwoven cloth, while the gravediggers worked, unable to keep ahead of the steady stream of dead.

The Iranian army set up an electric generator in the main camp just outside town. Bulldozers and construction machinery worked under the improvised lights powered by mobile generators.

In towns across the country shops were closed and workers went to their jobs in black mourning dress.

Government radio stopped its usual music broadcasts and cinemas shut down as part of a three-day period of national mourning.

Radio Iran said several infants were dug out alive. They were in their mothers' laps when the quake struck, but the mothers did not survive. The national women's organization said it would take care of them.

Officials said 150 smaller tremors had been recorded in Tabas and surrounding villages since the earthquake hit Saturday evening.

A spokesman for the geophysics centre in Teheran said that up to 800 tremors could potentially rock the area again within a month.

"Some of those tremors may be moderate and cause damage," he said.

Four earthquakes shook Mashad Monday but caused no damage or casualties, the official news agency Pars said.

Meanwhile, the Shah yesterday made his first public appearance since martial law was imposed in the country 12 days ago.

Plainclothes police frisked all visitors except ministers and ambassadors as the monarch opened the annual Teheran International Trade Fair, at which 40 countries are displaying their industrial products.

The Shah made no speech but visited some of the Iranian pavilions briefly before returning to his palace.

Because of the period of national mourning over the earthquake disaster, music and other inaugural features were dropped from yesterday's ceremony.

Residents said they noticed more military activity in the capital yesterday than had been apparent since martial law was declared on September 8, following a major demonstration against the Shah.

Scores of people were killed in street violence after the martial law rules were imposed. (UPI, AP, Reuters)

Robots lose TV battle to Carter

NEW YORK (Reuters). — President Jimmy Carter went on television to talk about peace, and hundreds of viewers complained they had been robbed of a comic war of the future.

The war they wanted was the one in the new TV space extravaganza "Battlestar Galactica," interrupted on Sunday night by live coverage of Carter's announcement of a breakthrough at the Camp David Middle East peace summit.

The ABC network offices in New York and Washington reported 800 complaints from annoyed viewers who had been absorbed by a story of space robots trying to destroy all human life.

"We let our children stay up especially to watch the programme, and by the time you got back to it they fell asleep and missed the ending," one caller said.

"It was right in the middle of the biggest battle," fumed another. "Why couldn't you have taped the men and shown it later?"

"Who cares about what goes on over there?" demanded another whose horizons stopped somewhat short of the Middle East.

If the number of protest calls is any gauge, ABC has beaten the other networks in the early running for ratings superiority this TV season.

NBC, showing the second part of the film "King Kong," reported only about 150 protest calls. At CBS, which interrupted the Emmy television awards for Carter, there was little protest.

Threatening calls worry Sakharov

MOSCOW (UPI). — Soviet dissident leader Andrei Sakharov said yesterday he is worried about threats of terrorist attacks on his family and dissident friends by a mysterious and previously unheard of organization.

The Nobel Peace Prize winning nuclear physicist told Western correspondents that the anonymous threats, mailed and telephoned, have come from a group calling itself the "all-union inter-ideological union."

Sakharov said his wife received a threatening telephone call last Sunday from a man who would identify himself only as the group's chairman.

"He said we are warning you and the so-called Russian social fund to stop your activities," Sakharov said. "If you don't stop, then we will take measures including terrorist acts."

The Russian social fund was set up with revenues from exiled Russian author Alexander Solzhenitsyn's "Gulag Archipelago" novels. It exists to help political prisoners and their families.

The fund's chief administrator, Alexander Ginzburg, was sentenced to seven years forced labour and five years internal exile last May. The fund is now administered by Ginzburg's wife, Irina, and others including Sergei Khachaturov and Malva Landau.

Sakharov said Mrs. Ginzburg also received an anonymous threat to kill her two sons, aged 6 and 3.

Pastor immolates self

EAST BERLIN (Reuters). — An East German pastor burned himself to death during a church service in the southern town of Falkenstein this weekend, church officials said today.

The officials, contacted by telephone in Falkenstein, said Pastor Rolf Guenther, 41, poured an inflammable liquid over himself during Sunday's service and set himself alight. He died from his injuries.

French Jews laud leaders for saving cause of peace

By JACK MAURICE
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

PARIS. — France's Jewish community voiced satisfaction with the Camp David agreements in an official statement issued yesterday by the representative Council for Jewish Institutions in France.

The council said: "We rejoice at the outcome of the Camp David conference and congratulate the three partners who have succeeded in saving the cause of peace and of digging the foundations of a promising agreement for settling the Middle East conflict."

The council's statement, which was published in the daily French-language bulletin of the Jewish Telegraph Agency, expressed hope that "with the backing of all men of good will in Israel and the Arab countries, a new chance will be given for ending a 30-year war."

An editorial in the JTA Paris bulletin, entitled "Day of Celebration," said: "Thanks to the idealism of the president of the U.S., the process of peace in the Middle East is now under way. Thanks to the stubbornness of President Sadat, who against hell and high water, maintained that peace could be attained and thanks to the love of Israel and the courage which inspired Mr. Begin, nothing will now stop the long march to peace which has now begun."

The editorial writer added: "Concerning the future of Cisjordan, the importance of Israel's concession has to be treated favourably."

The Paris-based daily "International Herald Tribune" said: "This compromise presents serious difficulties. The issue of the Jewish settlements in the occupied lands is not wholly settled and may well offer obstacles to peace in the Knesset."

"But the hard facts since the beginning of the Sadat-Begin-Carter association has at least been better than acute gloom seemed to imply, and progress toward a peace is being made."

Last battle near in dying Nicaragua revolt

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP). — The Nicaraguan National Guard yesterday sealed off all communication and access to the final rebel stronghold in a dying rebellion against the regime of President Anastasio Somoza.

Troops have apparently ringed Esteli, a town of 30,000 on the Pan-American highway. They aim to trap battle-hardened forces of the Sandinista Liberation Front, the guerrilla organisation spearheading the drive to oust the president.

There was no way to determine if the battle for Esteli had already begun. Attempts to fly over the potentially final battleground were banned. The guard has applied censorship on correspondents' dispatches.

Both the Sandinistas and the soldiers preparing for the battle at Esteli appeared to be far better armed than combatants at any of the earlier battles.

Sparse guerrilla forces have often been augmented by thousands of local citizens who man barricades with whatever weapons they can find, often pinning down the advancing guard for hours.

Castro meets with Rhodesian leader

NATROBI (UPI). — Rhodesian guerrilla leader Robert Mugabe held a three-hour meeting with Cuban President Fidel Castro to discuss "strengthening of ties," Addis Ababa radio said yesterday.

The two men met Monday, but it gave no details of the talks. An official statement was to be issued later, according to the broadcast.

The announcement was the first official word that Castro had met Mugabe. Both men have been in the Ethiopian capital for a week attending celebrations marking the revolution which toppled Emperor Haile Selassie four years ago.

Joshua Nkomo, who with Mugabe heads the Patriotic Front guerrilla alliance which is fighting Rhodesia's interim government, was in the Ethiopian capital last week, but there was no indication he met with Castro.

Nkomo's wing of the Patriotic Front is considered far closer to the Soviet Union and Cuba than Mugabe's, which is supplied mainly by China.

Stockholm police, squatters clash

STOCKHOLM (UPI). — Violence erupted again yesterday as mounted police charged against nearly 1,000 demonstrators protesting an attempt by 300 police to break up a year-long illegal occupation of four houses.

Police had thrown up roadblocks around the downtown block on Monday morning, allowing people to leave the area but barring re-entry to the four houses.

Yesterday morning, police horses charged against the demonstrators as the cordons were opened to allow in the 300 police working in two 15-hour shifts. The police union demanded the convenience. Three demonstrators were reported hurt.

The houses were condemned last year and were scheduled for demolition.

Vatican tells Arabs: sign summit accords

VATICAN CITY (UPI). — The Vatican newspaper "L'Osservatore Romano" called on all nations of the Middle East yesterday to join the Camp David peace agreement between Egypt and Israel after so much bloodshed.

Vatican-watchers said the front-page editorial by "L'Osservatore" director Valerio Volpini indicated the Vatican has made up its mind in favour of the agreement after studying it for 24 hours. The first reaction Monday had been a statement by spokesman Romeo Pandolfi that the Vatican was studying the outcome of the Camp David summit "with great interest."

The editorial, entitled "A Step Toward Peace," did not discuss specific points of the agreement. But it cited Pope John Paul's remark at his general audience last Wednesday that an agreement should not leave unresolved "such questions as the problem of the Palestinians, the security of Israel and the holy city of Jerusalem."

Cosmonauts head for new record

MOSCOW (UPI). — Soviet cosmonauts Vladimir Kovalev and Alexander Ivanchenko were just hours away from breaking the world manned spaceflight endurance record as they whirled around earth in the Salyut-6 space lab yesterday.

Kovalev and Ivanchenko, who rocketed into space on June 15 aboard their Soyuz-28 capsule, will equal the old spaceflight endurance record of 96 days 10 hours at 9:17 a.m. (S.T. Israel time) today.

The old record was set on March 15 by Soyuz-28 cosmonauts Yuri Romanenko and Georgy Grechko who broke the previous 84-day endurance record established by the U.S. Skylab 4 astronauts in 1974.

Congressmen praise Carter after summit

WASHINGTON (AP). — U.S. President Jimmy Carter's past and future rivals for the White House, praise his high-risk venture in Middle East peace-making, predict it will greatly enhance his popularity and re-election chances.

Both Republican and Democratic leaders, some of whom recently missed Carter as likely to be a term president, now say he has transformed the political landscape and probably earned as much as a 25-point boost in opinion polls.

Senator William Roth, Republican-Delaware, recommended that Carter, Prime Minister Menachem Begin and President Anwar Sadat be nominated for Nobel Peace Prizes.

The prevailing mood, as expressed by House and Senate members, was reported to a joint session Congress Monday night, was that president's achievement has alienated those who painted him as a flailing and unsure leader.

"I think that with one bold stroke he has erased any image of incompetence," said Sen. Democratic Leader Robert Byrd.

Senator Edward Brooke, Democrat-Massachusetts, thanked the president with increasing frequency these weeks as a potential challenger in 1980, said Carter proved himself adept at dealing with a tough and complex issue, "a feat the American people will surely understand and appreciate."

Senate leader Howard Baker, Republican-Tennessee, who has said he will consider a try for his party's presidential nomination in 1980, said Carter should be given "high marks for a job well done."

EEC backs Camp David agreements

BRUSSELS (UPI). — The foreign ministers of the nine European Economic Community (EEC) nations agreed yesterday to publicly endorse the Camp David peace accords, sources at the ministers' conference said.

Conference sources said all nine governments of EEC nations — Britain, France, West Germany, Italy, Ireland, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, Luxembourg and Italy — felt President Jimmy Carter deserves their full support for the role he played in the summit meeting with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

Conference sources said "serious doubts" at the start of the EEC foreign ministers' meeting concerning the attitude of France, which has sponsored a "global peace accord" different from the one reached at Camp David, French Foreign Minister Louis de Guiringaud quickly dispelled them.

"The accords signed at Camp David are a sign of good will toward peace," Guiringaud said. "They mark progress on this road."

Conference sources said the ministers would use their diplomatic channels to urge hard-line Arab nations to adopt a moderate position when their leaders meet in Damascus to try to coordinate their strategies against the Camp David agreements.

The sources said that Belgium's Foreign Minister Henri Simonet was expected to fly to Algiers today for urgent talks with President Houari Boumedienne, one of the most outspoken opponents of any deal leading to a direct Palestinian participation.

Prison break fails in Cyprus

NICOSIA (AP). — Rightwing extremists, foiled in an attempt to break out of Nicosia's central prison, surrendered unconditionally yesterday after a three-day siege and released their seven hostages unharmed, a police official said.

The nine prison insurgents and the fiancée of their leader gave up without a fight and were taken into custody by police chief Savvas Antoniou, the official said.

The hostages — three prison guards and four policemen — had tearful reunions with their families. Several collapsed into the arms of their wives.

Two hours before the surrender a number of shots had rung out from the besieged cellblock holding the jailed members of the Eoka-B underground. But apparently no one was wounded.

Police immediately began removing explosives they had placed outside one cellblock in the event that an assault would have become necessary to free the hostages.

The insurgents reportedly had threatened to kill their hostages unless given safe conduct out of the country.

But Cyprus' President Spyros Kyprianou refused to yield to "blackmail by prison terrorists" just as he had remained adamant against the demands of Eoka-B terrorists who had kidnapped his eldest son, Achilles, last December. The son, a lieutenant in the Greek Cypriot National Guard, was released from four days of captivity after the president refused to free jailed Eoka-B members, but pledged not to prosecute the kidnappers.

Italian terrorist to court: you can't try the revolution

MILAN, Italy (UPI). — Italy's No. 1 terrorist defiantly told the court trying him yesterday, "You cannot put revolution on trial in a country where there is so much unemployment."

Corrado Alunni, head of the ultra-leftist Red Brigades and considered the mastermind behind the kidnapping of former premier Aldo Moro, launched into a tirade against society, the news media and lawyers the moment he was led chained into court to answer charges of weapons possession and subversive conspiracy.

President Judge Francesco Saverio Borrelli cut him short after a heated exchange and adjourned the case until today.

Czech countess Prince Charles' new love

LONDON (Reuters). — Prince Charles has a new girl friend, a Czechoslovak countess, but Buckingham Palace yesterday denied that the couple were in love.

The latest candidate in a long line of girls whose names have been linked with the heir to the British throne is Countess Angelika Lazansky.

The tall (1.8 metre), dark haired Angelika, dubbed "Charlie's girl" by the Sun newspaper in a front-page report, spent the weekend with the prince at Balmoral in the Scottish Highlands.

The countess is a Roman Catholic whose family fled Czechoslovakia in 1947 and lives in Paris. She met the prince in Deauville, France, last year. Her age was not reported.

However, a Buckingham Palace spokesman said the countess was only one of many visitors to Balmoral. "He has lots of friends. This is nothing out of the ordinary. The story is very far-fetched."

He added that any suggestions that the prince was in love were "a whole load of rubbish."

Wizo will back non-party candidates

By LEA LEVAVI
Jerusalem Post Reporter
TEL AVIV — WIZO has agreed to back five independent mayoral candidates to help depoliticize the local authorities.
"We don't want the municipalities to be just another political arena," explained Tania Leventfisch Streifler, chairman of WIZO's Council on the Status of Women. "We have offered seminars on leadership and on municipal government, and we think there are many women who can contribute a great deal to local government, particularly in such basic areas as education, welfare and the quality of life."
In addition to WIZO, which has offered its clubs and informational facilities to the candidates, the Israel Association of University Women and the Scroptomists will also add their support.
Candidates with whom agreements have been reached so far include heads of nonparty lists in Netanya, Kiryat Ono, Kfar Smaryahu and Kiryat Tivon — where the male candidates have promised realistic places on their lists to women — and Beit Shemesh, where mayoral candidate Tamar Katorza promised realistic places on her list to men.

Beware of strangers and dentists, say doctors

By HAIM SHAPIRO
Jerusalem Post Reporter
Every time you sit in a dentist's chair, get a blood transfusion, or have sexual relations with a stranger, you are in danger of contracting a dangerous and possibly fatal strain of hepatitis.
The danger was reported on Monday at an international symposium on viral hepatitis conducted by the Hebrew University-Hadassah Medical School in Jerusalem.
Participants in the symposium included Aris Zuckerman of the London School for Tropical Medicine and Hygiene, Niels Tystrup of the Copenhagen School of Medicine, Roger Williams of Kings College Hospital in London, and Marcel Eliakim of the Hebrew University-Hadassah Medical School.
They explained that one strain of hepatitis, known as Strain A, is contracted by most Israelis without their realizing it. They are then immune to this strain.
However, they may still contract Strain B, a far more serious virus. Approximately one per cent of Israel's population carries this strain without showing any symptoms.
The number of carriers is far higher among Jews from African and Asian countries, the experts said. Among immigrants from Libya, 6 per cent are carriers; those from Yemen, Iraq and Kurdistan include 4 per cent carriers. Israeli Arabs show a 3 per cent rate as carriers.
The number of carriers is determined by examining blood donor samples. Ideally, all blood donations by carriers should have been screened out, but, said the participants, this does not always happen.
One of the most common ways in which strain B is transmitted is through blood or blood products — which is why drug addicts who use unsterilized needles are particularly susceptible. Others in danger of contracting the disease are homosexuals who have many partners, and the clients of prostitutes. One study showed that the virus was carried by bedbugs from the beds of prostitutes in Ghana.
But transmission can be by far more prosaic ways, according to the symposium participants. A dentist, or a ritual circumciser, or an acupuncture specialist who does not sterilize his instruments properly can spread the disease. So can jewellers who pierce ears.
By sterilization, the participants stressed, they did not mean a rub with alcohol, which does not kill the virus. A full 10 minutes in boiling water is needed, they said.
Other means of prevention are being examined, including the possibility that eventually a vaccine may be developed.

Bundestag official sceptical Nazi statute will be extended

By JOSHUA BRILLIANT
Jerusalem Post Correspondent
BAD GODESBERG, West Germany. — Although Israel and Poland are pressing for it, Annemarie Renger, the vice-president of the West German Bundestag, is sceptical that the statute of limitations on Nazi war crimes, which expires on December 31, 1979, will be extended.
Mrs. Renger, who visited Israel in 1978 as guest of the Knesset, told The Jerusalem Post that an extension would require a change in the constitution. The 20-year statute has been extended several times in the past under pressure from various countries.
Witnesses would have a difficult time recalling the events of 35 years ago, she pointed out.
A call for the Bundestag to extend the statute was made on Monday by Israel's ambassador to Bonn, Yohanan Meroz. In an address to a symposium organized by the German-Israel Association.
"Issues deriving from the past, relating to the relations between the two countries, are here again," he said. "Some things only you can do."
Although Meroz did not elaborate, Israeli sources said no German present could fail to understand what he was referring to in his remarks.
Israelis also complained that Nazi war crime trials are drawn out, citing as an example the 14 people accused of murder in the Maidanek trial which has lasted two-and-a-half years with no end in sight.
The ambassador's call was backed by several Knesset members attending the symposium. Mordechai Wirshubski (Shas) complained that on December 31, 1979, tens of thousands of war criminals may come out of hiding and no one will be able to do anything about it.

A stitch in time...

A DOCTOR'S NOTEBOOK/Dr. David Samson

Intestines, and the herniation generally takes place through the abdominal wall at some point where there is a natural or acquired weakness.
Occasionally such an alimentary hernia can take place through the diaphragm into the chest, but hernias which appear around the groin area are the most common. These are the ones often referred to as ruptures. These can occur at all ages and in both sexes, but males are usually affected more than females.
THE commonest type of groin hernia is known medically as an inguinal hernia since the protrusion of bowel is into the inguinal canal, an occasional area of the lower abdominal wall at the groin. This protrusion may be permanent or intermittent. Usually the internal organ involved is some portion of the area worth mentioning is the femoral hernia, which is commoner in women. It develops at a weak spot at the top of the leg where the large leg veins enter the trunk. It is usually much smaller than an inguinal hernia and may thus be more difficult to discover, especially if there is much fatty tissue around it. Femoral hernias are notoriously prone to become trapped (as described above). Indeed the symptoms thus produced may sometimes be the first evidence that such a hernia exists.

The best treatment for the types of hernia mentioned here is surgical. And the best time to have this done is obviously, electively rather than when complications set in. Operations to repair hernias and to strengthen the weak points involved so they don't recur are among the safest and most straightforward of operations. The actual procedure undertaken will vary slightly according to the age of the patient and the exact nature and extent of the hernia. Simplest of all is to repair inguinal hernias in young children and babies. They can often return home from hospital the day after the operation.
Where operation is inadvisable for any reason, some sort of pressure device or truss over the groin may help to keep the hernia in check although this may be difficult to arrange as it usually is lower down the groin. Today, however, with advances and refinements in both anaesthetic and surgical technique, more and more patients previously thought unfit for hernia surgery can be operated upon without any undue risk. Age of course is no bar. My oldest patient to be treated surgically for his rupture entered hospital a few weeks before his 87th birthday.
SO MY patient Meir Kagan, who had resisted a hernia operation for three years although perfectly fit and had made do with the intermittent use of a truss, arrived in hospital under very different circumstances than might otherwise have been the case. He was operated upon almost immediately, and a strangulated portion of bowel inside the trapped hernia, which had been responsible for the condition I had found him in, was excised, and the hernia belatedly repaired. He spent three times as long in hospital as he would have done for routine hernia surgery.
This story, however, did have one fortunate and rather unexpected outcome. Now if I encounter a hernia patient reluctant to contemplate surgery, I get Meir Kagan to have a word with him. I don't know exactly what he says to these patients but since he has been helping me in this way, no one has ever turned down such surgery if it has been the recommended treatment.

Danish Plus bedroom scheme combining seagrass floor matting and cane headboard with Victorian style lace and floral furnishings.

Something old and something new...

The traditional way of dressing a bride can be the basis of a satisfying scheme for giving a room an individual look.

SHOP WITH A PLUS

By CATHERINE ROSENHEIMER/Jerusalem Post Reporter

THERE IS more "plus" and less "Danish" to be found in Danish Plus stores these days. The fifth boutique in the chain opened this month in Tel Aviv's Kikar Hamedina, with a range of caneware, china, glass, kitchen, living room and bedroom accessories and household textiles, some of local manufacture, others imported from the Far East, England and Scandinavia.

Danish merchandise has become so expensive as to make much of it totally unobtainable in Israel, says the chain's director and designer, Tamara Tollman. She intends her shops to be places for personal buying.

"The idea was to offer well-designed, informal, young-style, home accessories and occasional furnishings — things that people will buy as gifts for themselves — small items, not necessarily expensive, which can brighten up the interior of your home without making major alterations, or going into vast expense."

Ranges of locally produced merchandise — all exclusive to the stores — have increased during the past couple of years, as the price of imports has soared. All the white porcelain dinner sets on sale are made specially for Danish Plus by Naaman. Cotton fabrics with Art Deco style prints are all Israeli — available by the metre, for curtaining, and made up into Victorian style tiered and flounced tablecloths, bedspreads and cushions.

Cane bedheads (starting at IL650) are also locally made, though a wide range of other cane occasional furniture, accessories and seagrass matting are all imported from the Far East. All caneware is fumigated against woodworm on arrival: a very wise precaution, as an unfortunate personal experience recently taught me. I recently noticed some tell-tale dust marks on the floor beneath a large antique dresser, which had apparently been infected with woodworm by two straw baskets (made in Hong Kong). It cost over IL1,000 to transport the dresser to Tel Aviv and back for professional anti-woodworm treatment. My household luxury many policy was of no help, since I discovered it contained a clearly stated exclusion clause on any damage caused by woodworm or vermin.

GOURMET cooks will find a wide range of specialised kitchen equipment, soufflé dishes, ramekins, and an excellent range of heavy quality black cast iron casseroles, frying pans and saucepans. A 4-litre casserole in the Danish Copco range will cost you IL530 (not including VAT) and is probably a luxury many people cannot afford — but definitely a long-term investment, and a very attractive piece of oven-to-table ware.

Simply designed tumblers and wineglasses start at IL19, so that even a full set is not a major extravagance. Plain coloured cushions start at IL80, in eight different colours, which can be mixed and matched with the printed fabrics. Velvet cushions cost IL185 each.

A relatively new line at Danish Plus is children's dresses, up to age 12, made by a local manufacturer especially for the store. For the winter Tamara Tollman intends to market a line of matching mother-and-daughter fashions in the same loose, comfortable, peasant-look styles.

As an independent off-shoot of Danish Interiors, the boutiques can also offer the same interior design advisory services as the parent company, and their pretty, feminine bedroom schemes combining their own fabrics, lampshades and soft furnishings with cane furniture have become a speciality. Danish Plus is also one of only a handful of local shops offering a bride's list service, an idea which has been slow to catch on in Israel, but is gradually becoming more popular. The shop will guarantee to keep all selected items on the list in stock, in all of its five branches, until after the wedding, and will also exchange a number of smaller items for large purchases, if the young couple decide, for example, that they would rather complete an entire basic dinner set than fill their new home with less vital small accessories.

FROM ROSH HASHANA through Simhat Tora, it is traditional to serve sweet cakes in hope of a sweet year to come. Here are some favourites of my family and my husband's.

MOM'S HONEY CAKE

3 cups flour
2 t. baking powder
1 t. baking soda
1 t. cinnamon
1/2 t. ginger
1/2 t. nutmeg
1 cup sugar
3 eggs
2 T. vegetable oil
1 cup honey
1 cup strong coffee
1/2 cup raisins
1/2 cup nuts

1. Sift flour, baking powder, baking soda, cinnamon, ginger and nutmeg into a mixing bowl. Set aside.
2. Add sugar to eggs in second bowl and beat until fluffy. Add oil, honey and coffee and blend. Slowly add flour mixture and mix well. Add raisins and nuts. Pour into a greased and floured tube pan. Bake in 325°F (170°C) oven for 1 hour and 10 minutes.

SWEET NEW YEAR

FROM MY JERUSALEM KITCHEN/Sybil Zimmerman

GRANDMA'S TEIGLACH

2 1/2 cups flour
1 t. baking powder
1/2 t. oil
4 eggs
1/4 t. salt
3/4 cup brown sugar
2 cups honey
1 t. ginger
1/2 t. nutmeg
1 cup chopped nuts

1. Sift flour and baking powder into a mixing bowl. Add oil, eggs and salt and stir until a dough is formed. Set aside.

2. Place sugar, honey, ginger and nutmeg in a saucepan. Bring to a boil and cook 15 minutes. Finish off pieces of the dough and drop into the boiling honey mixture. Continue cooking until the syrup is thick. Add nuts and stir.

3. Wet a board or tray or counter with cold water. Pour the honey-dough-nut pieces onto the board and let cool slightly. Shape dough with wet hands into 2-inch (5 cm) balls or squares or whatever shape you like.

SOUL CREAM COFFEE CAKE

3 cups flour
1 1/2 cups sugar
1 1/2 t. baking soda
1 1/2 t. baking powder
1/2 t. salt
3/4 cup butter or margarine
1 1/2 cups sour cream
3 eggs
1 1/2 t. vanilla
1/2 cup nuts

Filling

2 T. sugar
1 T. cinnamon
1/4 cup nuts

1. Mix flour, sugar, baking soda, baking powder and salt in a mixing bowl.

2. Add butter or margarine, sour cream eggs and vanilla. Blend well. Add nuts and mix. Pour half mixture into a greased baking pan. 3. Mix centre filling ingredients of sugar, cinnamon and nuts and pour over batter. Pour on rest of batter. Bake in 350°F (180°C) oven 1 hour.

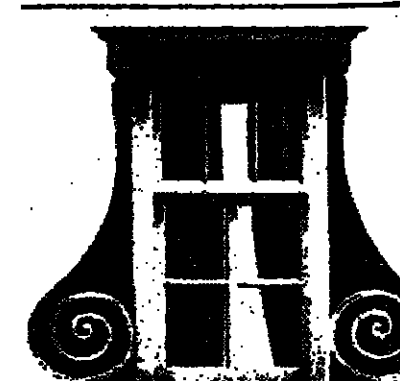

QUICK COFFEE CAKE

2 1/2 cups flour
3 t. baking powder
1/2 t. salt
6 T. butter or margarine
1 cup sugar
1 egg
1/2 cup milk or pareve whip
1 1/2 t. vanilla

Topping

1/2 cup brown sugar
2 T. flour
2 t. cinnamon

2 T. softened butter or margarine
1/2 cup chopped nuts
1. Blend flour, baking powder and salt in a mixing bowl. Blend in butter or margarine, then add sugar.
2. Add egg, milk and vanilla and blend well. Spread on bottom of greased baking pan.
3. Mix topping ingredients — sugar, flour, cinnamon, margarine and nuts. Sprinkle on top of batter. Bake in 350°F (180°C) oven 30 minutes or until a toothpick inserted in cake comes out clean.

LIVING ROOM

A coating for your walls, while both lovely and decorative, requires a protective covering. Give the wood the tint you like and the protection it needs.

Colour

Politon is the tinted, transparent lacquer which brings out the natural wood grain, and provides it with a light or dark colouring in pastel or natural shades. Politon adds new colour and sheen to the wood and simultaneously protects it from dampness and other external injurious influences. Politon contains no poisonous substances — an important fact to keep in mind for a household with children. If you want to shield the wood from mould and fungi, then use Tambour's "Wood Shield" as a base before applying the Politon coating.

How to do it

Clean the area to be painted from dirt and oils. Go over lightly with sandpaper, and apply paint directly to the wood. Be sure the area between each of the 3 layers is dry before applying the succeeding one.

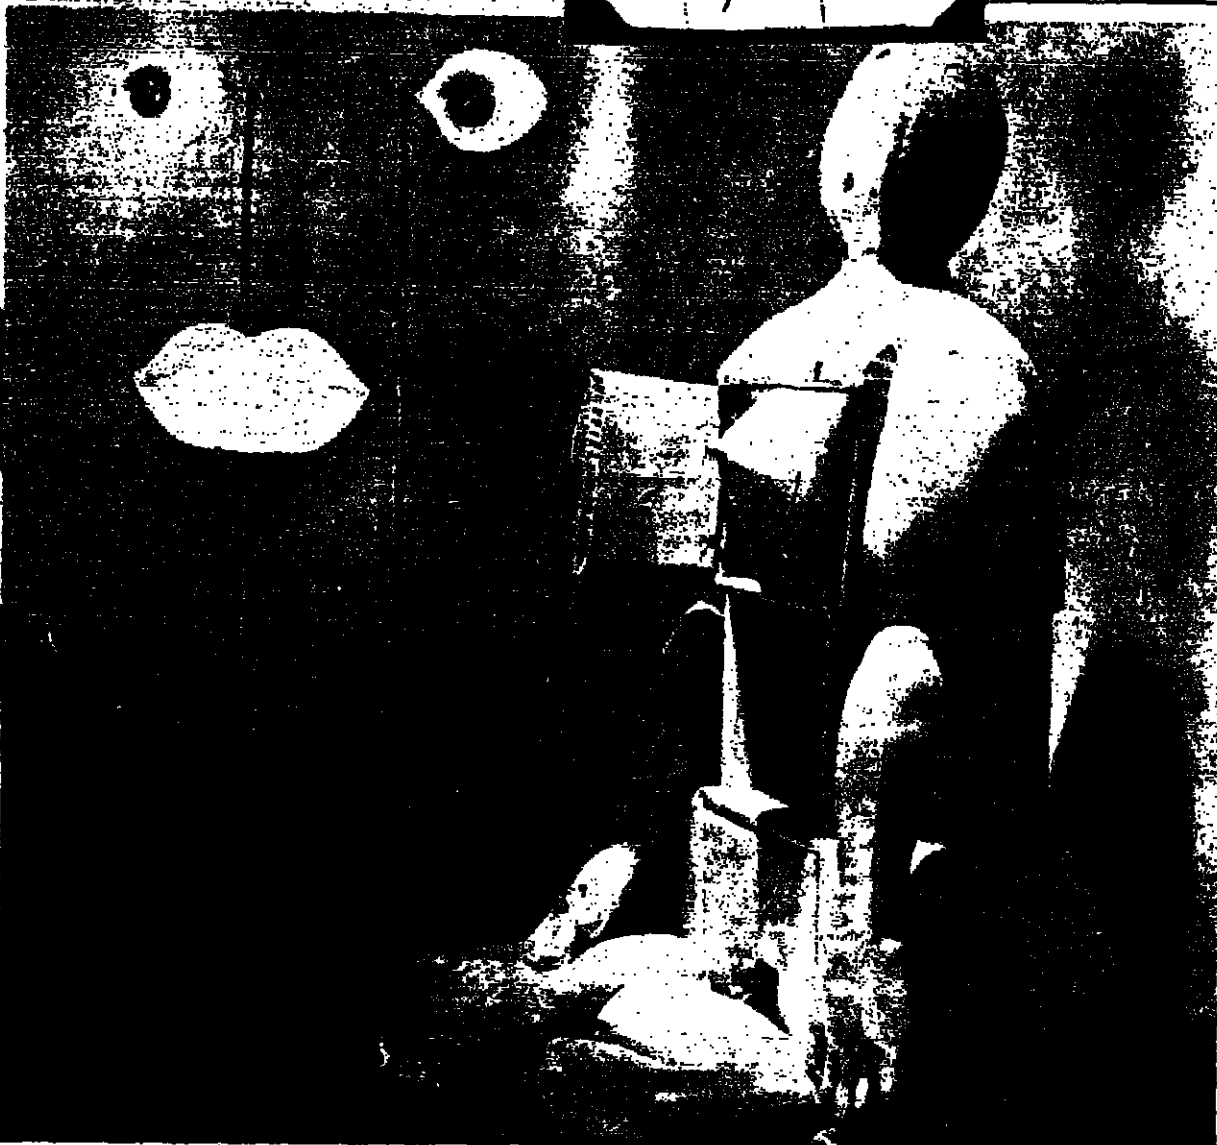

Paint price — IL25
per square meter.

This concerns YOU

If there are internal or external wood surfaces in your home which you wish to brighten up; or if you are in need of advice on painting the inside surfaces, turn today to Tambour's counselling department. They will be happy to help you.

No need to be too scientific

BRIDGE

George E. Levinrew

MOST OF US do not play super-scientific bridge. Personally, I am delighted to play the simpler and equally effective First Up bidding system.

But in today's deal, let us consider the super-scientific approach of Mike Becker and Ron Rubin, two of America's leading players, in a deal which was submitted to the International Bridge Press Association in the competition for the best bid hand of the year.

Love all

Becker		Rubin
NORTH		SOUTH
♠ Q J 9	♥ A 7 4	♠ A K 8	♥ A 7 4
♦ A 7 4	♣ A 3 10 6	♦ A K 8	♣ A 3 10 6
♣ A K 8		♣ A K 8

The bidding:

SOUTH	NORTH
1 ♠	2 ♠
2 ♠	3 ♠
3 ♠	4 ♠
4 ♠	5 ♠
5 ♠	6 ♠
6 ♠	7 ♠

North's first bid of two clubs was artificial, forcing to game. His next three bids were relays, requesting more information. South's responses gave him distribution. Subsequent bidding involved asking and denial cue bids. In all, there were 18 bids to reach the grand slam. The bidding is indeed involved and so specialized it surpasses my understanding of its rationale.

In First Up, which is natural and so much easier, the bidding would be as follows:

1 ♠	3 ♠
2 ♠	4 ♠
3 ♠	5 ♠
4 ♠	6 ♠
5 ♠	7 ♠

(1) I have at least four clubs and at least 12 points or four tricks. (2) I have at least four diamonds and at least 17 points or six tricks. (3) My hand actually counts to five tricks together we have 11 tricks. I have at least six good hearts; if I had only five hearts or six topped by the queen I would bid only three hearts, since I do not know if we have a heart fit. (4) My good heart fit counts for one or possibly two extra tricks. I am headed for a slam so for safety I make the Blackwood bid. (5) One ace. (6) Blackwood. We have all four aces. (7) Two kings. (8) You have only three cards in spades and diamonds. They are covered by aces and one of your kings. With the good fit in clubs, the grand slam is an odds-on choice. First Up required only eight bids to reach the grand slam. The contract can be made by a squeeze against West. Why be super-scientific?

Home profit-taking as euphoria subsides

By JOSEPH MORGENSTERN
Jerusalem Post Finance Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The euphoria created by the Camp David peace pact subsided yesterday and the equity market returned to a more normal rise. Overall, price changes were mixed. The shares which had the longest runups on Monday were subject to mild profit-taking, while those which had not fully shared in the buying rush showed minor advances.

The local market is taking a more sober view of current events and beginning to behave more like the rest of the world's markets. The New York Stock Exchange began its day's session by moving higher, by the end of the day losses prevailed.

Commercial banks were generally somewhat higher. Bank Leumi led the most active list and gained one point, to 407. Union Bank, on the other hand, continued to gain 1.50 to 587. IDB gained 2.00 to 416, but Hapoalim and Mizrahi were unchanged.

Foreign banks traded in a very narrow range, with changes hardly noticeable. Amptel, however, was a one feature as it rose by 18 to 520. Insurance shares followed suit and rose almost unchanged. Hasmoneh rose one, while Sahar remained in the red. Aryeh was down by eight, to 30. Securities eased by five, while Hasmoneh rose by 10, to 590. The 10 p.m. closing of the IL 6 shares was 448, but the IL 6 shares were at 448.

The Israel Land Development, among the real estate and land development firms, was down by three, to 236.

Employment may benefit from peace move

By AARON SITTNER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Opening the border between Israel and Egypt could have a far-reaching — and probably positive — effect on the employment picture here, Yisrael Goralnik, director-general of the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs, believes.

In an interview with The Post yesterday, Goralnik said: "Not having ever shared geographical access with our neighbours, we can only learn from the experience of others. Specifically, we witnessed that when intra-European national borders were opened after World War II, cultural, tourism and business intercourse expanded so rapidly that the European Economic Community was born."

"Needless to say, two-way economic activity between Egypt and ourselves will mean more jobs, and on both sides of the border."

Asked if freedom of movement for Egyptian workers could lead to availability of a source of cheap labour that could endanger Israeli workers' jobs, Goralnik said this was possible theoretically, but could not in fact come about.

"Our labour unions are not exactly weaklings, you know," Goralnik said. "Besides, we would probably institute a system of work permits for foreign labourers, and the Egyptians could do likewise."

As for Israelis working in Egypt, Goralnik foresees two major trends. First, Jewish Israelis with professional expertise could work in

Exporters consider setting up new air freight line

By YITZHAK OKED
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — A new air cargo company may be established here and importers and exporters may turn to foreign airlines, unless El Al modifies the proposed hikes in its freight rates which are to go into effect on November 1.

A number of importers and exporters belonging to the Israel Export Institute announced here yesterday the formation of the Organisation of Air Cargo Shippers.

The chairman of the organisation, Moshe Shavit, who is also managing director of Agrexco, said that the organisation was not formed "against anything, but for the promotion of exports. This could only be done by lowering air freight charges."

Reuven Livny, the director of the transport and services division of the Export Institute, said that since the independent cargo line, he had become a part of El Al by government decision, there was no more competition in the field and El Al was free to raise its rates. El Al

Changing character of Kupat Holim rest homes

By MACABEE DEAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

ZICHRON YA'ACOV. — The character of the network of rest homes run by Kupat Holim is changing. At one time our guests came to fill their stomachs three times a day with generous meals plus two snacks — midmorning and midafternoon. Now we are planning to open a special department for those who want to diet and lose weight. At one time our guests spent most of their time lounging around or reading, now we are stepping up our physical activities and body-building programmes, especially for the elderly. In the past couples came to get away from their young children, now more and more are bringing them so they can have a "family vacation." Once we were open mainly during the spring and summer, now we are trying to stay open throughout the year, and to attract more and more persons during the winter off-season.

This is stated by WILLI BERNHOLZ, who holds the "rest home portfolio" in Kupat Holim. The sick fund runs 13 rest homes, often for specific unions, like construction workers. It also operates another three convalescent homes for persons who need to recuperate after an illness or operation. In all, there are 3,200 rooms.

However, Kupat Holim has also reached an agreement with three

Idle youths are target of drive by Labour and Social Affairs Ministry

By AARON SITTNER
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs is preparing a new campaign against the phenomenon of "no work/no study" among teenagers, according to Yisrael Goralnik, ministry director-general.

He told The Jerusalem Post yesterday: "Now that the ministries of Labour and Social Welfare have been consolidated, we have joined with the Education Ministry in an all-out drive to locate the estimated 12,000 to 14,000 boys and girls between 14 and 17 who are neither in school nor hold jobs."

Goralnik said that within a few months his office as well as the Ministry of Education will have a detailed name and address list of these young people, many of whom are rejected from army service because of their low aptitudes.

And now Hussein

THE LOGICAL next move after the Camp David summit is now being taken by U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, in his visit with King Hussein at his palace.

Although the visit may seem to have been forced upon the Hashemite monarch by President Carter, it has in fact been solicited from Amman: Hussein is, so to speak, allowing Mr. Vance to chase him — until he catches the Secretary of State. The picture has been somewhat befogged by Hussein's deliberate ducking of President Sadat during the latter's intended stay in Rabat.

In the Moroccan capital, information and opinion could usefully have been exchanged while Hussein was on his way from vacation in Spain back to Jordan. Apparently, the King is not too eager to appear especially anxious to hop on the peace-talks bandwagon. At the very least, he wishes to be wooed with further promises before he joins in.

There has, of course, for long been a school of thought in Amman, which urged the total severance of Transjordan's connection to the unruly West Bank.

The prospect is that the West Bank (and, to slightly lesser extent, Gaza) may remain fairly unruly. The local population has not greeted the Camp David formula with any excess of enthusiasm. The slogans with which Hussein has sought to win popular support this side of the Jordan — total Israeli withdrawal, and Palestinian self-determination — find no expression in the Camp David accords.

Presumably, it will be Secretary Vance's task to persuade King Hussein that the programme is well worth his support. While it does not provide for a pullback of all Israeli troops to the old border, it does envisage the end of Israeli occupation, and the emergence of the territories into full autonomy.

The duration of Israel's military presence, Mr. Vance may be expected to tell King Hussein, is proper subject for negotiation. While the U.S. has taken no official position in the matter, it will, to say the least, not oppose the idea of substituting complete demilitarization and neutral early warning stations for Israeli military presence, in the long run.

As for the prospect of new Israeli settlements sprouting in the territories, the U.S. believes that it is not very real. In any case it holds that the agreed moratorium on such new settlements should be for the duration of talks on the future of the territories, which is five years at least, and not a mere three months, as suggested by Mr. Begin.

As for any possible Israeli demand for border rectification, it is, of course, the well-known American position that any such change would have to be minor, and justified on security grounds alone.

At any rate, Jordan's refusal to take an active part in the implementation of the Camp David plan would only strengthen the influence of the PLO in the territories; and it would bring joy to the Soviet-sponsored "Steadfastness Front," which is gathering for another talk-fest in Damascus today. Neither development should be especially heartwarming to King Hussein.

Not that Mr. Vance has given up entirely even on Syria, the Steadfasters' host. After seeing King Hussein, he will be calling on President Assad, in an effort to talk the Syrian leader, too, into lending a helping hand. A meeting between Hussein and Assad will duly follow.

So much hectic activity ought, in theory, to produce some positive results. However, the tenor of the communiqué put out in Amman last night after the session of the Jordan cabinet, promises more stonewalling than reasoning together.

A Hadassah first

THE FIRST Hadassah Convention ever to be held in this country opened last night at a time of great jubilation for Israel and the Jewish people.

Hadassah leaders have been planning this convention for two years, so they obviously cannot have contemplated that it would take place precisely at a time when such momentous news would be announced, but the timing has certainly proved to be a good omen for the deliberations of the largest Zionist bloc in the world.

The present convention, with its 3,000 delegates and guests, is one of the largest gatherings of its kind ever to take place in Israel. It was planned by Hadassah as a tribute to the State on its thirtieth anniversary. Some Israelis have wondered, however, why such a tribute was not paid before the lapse of thirty years.

Hadassah's answer is that the logistics were staggering: normally the annual conventions take place in one hotel in a large American city, with the convention centre in that hotel, and with no touring involved.

Here the Hadassah delegates are housed in 25 hotels, and the sight of their 65 buses travelling around Jerusalem has become a familiar and rather daunting one.

With the precedent of a Jerusalem convention established, we hope it will be followed in the future. For to enable the many Hadassah delegates to see their important medical and educational projects here at first hand, must be a source of inspiration, just as it permits Israel to directly express its gratitude.

A RECORD total of 73 women began studying for the rabbinate in Reform and Reconstructionist seminaries when the 1978-79 academic year got underway this month, according to a Jewish Telegraphic Agency survey.

Seven women have been ordained as Reform rabbis since the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion began accepting women for ordination and four new hold pulpits. Four women have been graduated from the Reconstructionist Rabbinical College in Philadelphia, and one is in a pulpit.

Stanley Saplin, associate information director of the HUC-JIR, reported that a total of 209 students are registered for rabbinical studies in the Reform seminaries in Los Angeles, Cincinnati and New York City, and that 60 are women. Mrs. Jennifer Gabriel, registrar for the Reconstructionist school, informed the JTA that there are 13 women candidates registered for the new school year.

The only female Reconstructionist rabbi holding a pulpit is Rabbi Sandy Eisenberg Sasso, who, in a unique arrangement, shares the pulpit of Congregation Beth El Zedek of Indianapolis with her husband, Rabbi Dennis Sasso.

Saplin said that of the 209 Reform candidates registered for the 1978-79 year, 47 will be studying in Jerusalem, 17 of them women.

IT HAS been more than 2,000 years since there was peace between Egypt and a free Jewish nation. If our present expectations are realized, this year we shall see such peace.

I would like to give tribute to the two men who have made this impossible dream now become a real possibility — the two great national leaders with whom I have met for the last two weeks at Camp David — President Anwar Sadat and Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

At Camp David we sought a peace which is not only of vital importance to their own two nations, but to all the people of the Middle East — indeed, to the rest of the world as well.

The world prayed for the success of our efforts, and those prayers have been answered.

I have come here tonight to discuss what these strong leaders have accomplished — and what it means for all of us.

The United States has had no choice but to be concerned about the Middle East, and to use our influence and efforts to advance the cause of peace. For the last 30 years, through four wars, the people of this troubled region have paid a terrible price in suffering, division, hatred and bloodshed.

No two nations have suffered more than Israel and Egypt. But the dangers and the costs of conflict in this region for our nation have been great as well. We have long-standing friendships with the nations and peoples of the region, and profound moral commitments which are deeply rooted in our values as a people.

The strategic location of these countries and the resources they possess mean that events in the Middle East directly affect people everywhere. We and our friends could not be indifferent if a hostile power were to establish domination there.

In few areas of the world is there a greater risk that a local conflict could spread among other nations and then erupt into confrontation between the superpowers. Our people have come to understand that unfamiliar names — Sinai, Akaba, Sharm el-Sheikh, Ras en-Nakh, Gaza, the West Bank of the Jordan — can have a direct and immediate bearing on our well-being as a nation and our hope for a peaceful world.

That is why we cannot be idle bystanders, why we have been full partners in the search for peace, and why it is so vital to our nation that these meetings have been a success.

THROUGH THE long years of conflict, four main issues have divided the parties.

One is the nature of peace — whether peace will mean simply that the guns are silenced, the bombs stop falling and the tanks cease to roll, or whether it will mean that nations of the Middle East can deal with each other as neighbors and equals, with the full range of diplomatic, cultural, economic and human relations between them. The Camp David agreement has defined such relationships for Israel and her neighbors.

The second main issue is providing for the security of all the parties involved, including Israel, so that none of them need fear attack or military threats from any other. When implemented, the Camp David agreement will provide for such security.

Third is the question of an agreement on secure and recognized boundaries, the end of military occupation and the granting of self-government or return to other nations of territories occupied by Israel during the 1967 conflict. The Camp David agreement provides for the realization of these goals.

READERS' LETTERS

POOR PLANNING

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post
Sir, — As an avid music lover and concert goer, I read with great interest Yohanan Boehm's article on the Israel Music Festival. "The festival: what happened?" (September 8).

I'm sure that the planning committee for the 1978 Festival will take note of his many points of constructive criticism and will try to avoid the mistakes of this year.

This is one additional point which I wish to add and hopefully this too will lead in a great measure to the success of future festivals.

This year, it was impossible for thousands of music lovers like myself to attend any of the musical events due to the fact that they were all held during the three weeks of mourning preceding Tisha Be'Av. We simply felt left out in the planning. As a matter of fact, in very poor taste and with great insensitivity, the opening concert was held on the 17th of Tammuz, which is a fast day and the beginning of the three-week mourning period. It is well known that during this period, no weddings, bar-mitzvah celebrations or similar celebrations are held, and in planning future musical events, it would be good programming to take this into consideration.

Since it is the Israel Festival of Music and it is held in the eternal city of Jerusalem, it is only fitting to set the date according to the spirit of the Jewish calendar as well.

WYOMING

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post
Sir, — In your story, "Cowboys and kneidelach" (September 8), you state that Wyoming "is still the least populated state in the whole country."

The last (1970) U.S. census places Wyoming in the 49th place — Alaska having the distinction of being the least populated state.

Text of President Jimmy Carter's address to Congress

'One of the bright moments in human history'

And finally there is the painful human question of the fate of the Palestinians who live or who have lived in this disputed region. The Camp David agreement guarantees that the Palestinian people may participate in the resolution of the Palestinian problem in all its aspects.

OVER THE LAST 18 months, there has been progress on some of these issues. Egypt and Israel came close to agreeing about the first issue — the nature of peace. They saw that the second and third — withdrawal and security — were intimately connected. But fundamental divisions remain in other areas — about the fate of the Palestinians, the future of the West Bank and Gaza, and the future of Israeli settlements in occupied Arab territories.

We all remember the hopes for peace that were inspired by President Sadat's visit to Jerusalem last November, by the warm response of Prime Minister Begin and the Israeli people, and by the mutual promise that there would be no more war. Those hopes were sustained when Prime Minister Begin reciprocated by visiting Ismailiya on Christmas Day.

That progress continued, at a slower rate, through the early part of this year, but by early summer the negotiations had come to a standstill once again. It was this stalemate and the prospect of an even worse future that prompted me to invite both President Sadat and Prime Minister Begin to meet me at Camp David.

It is impossible to overstate the courage of these two men, or the foresight they have shown. Only through high ideals, through compromises of words and not of principle, and through a willingness to look deep into the human heart and to understand one another, can progress ever be made.

That is what these men and their wise and diligent advisers have done during these last 13 days.

When this conference began, I said that the prospects for success were remote. Enormous barriers of ancient history, nationalism, and suspicion would have to be overcome if we were to meet our objectives.

But President Sadat and Prime Minister Begin have overcome those barriers, exceeded those expectations, and signed two agreements that hold out the possibility of resolving issues that history had taught us could not be resolved.

THE FIRST of the two documents is entitled "A Framework for Peace in the Middle East agreed at Camp David." It deals with comprehensive settlement between Israel and all her neighbors, as well as the difficult question of the Palestinian people and the future of the West Bank and Gaza.

The agreement provides a basis for the resolution of issues involving the West Bank and Gaza over the next five years. It outlines a process of change which is in keeping with Arab hopes, while also respecting Israel's vital security interests.

The Israeli military government over those areas will be withdrawn and will be replaced with a self-government with full autonomy. Israeli forces will also be withdrawn and redeployed into specified locations to protect Israel's security.

The Palestinians will further participate in determining their own future through talks in which elected representatives of the inhabitants of the West Bank and Gaza will negotiate with Egypt, Israel and Jordan to determine the final status of the West Bank and Gaza.

Israel has agreed that the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people will be recognized. After the signing of this framework and during the negotiations concerning Palestinian self-government, no new Israeli settlements will be established in this area. The issue of future settlements will be decided among the negotiating parties.

The final status of the West Bank and Gaza will be decided by the end of the five-year transitional period, as part of a negotiation which will also produce a peace treaty between Israel and Jordan.

These negotiations will be based on all the provisions and principles of U.N. Security Council Resolution 242. The agreement on the final status of these areas will be submitted to a vote by the representatives of the inhabitants of the West Bank and Gaza, and they will have the right, for the first time in their history, to decide how they will govern themselves.

We also believe there should be a just settlement on the problems of displaced persons and refugees which takes into account appropriate U.N. resolutions.

Finally, this document also outlines a variety of security arrangements to reinforce peace between Israel and its neighbors. This is, indeed, a comprehensive and fair framework for peace in the Middle East.

THE SECOND agreement is entitled "A Framework for the Conclusion of a Peace Treaty between Egypt and Israel." It returns to Egypt the full exercise of its sovereignty over the Sinai peninsula and establishes several security zones for the protection of all parties.

It also provides that Egypt will extend full diplomatic recognition to Israel at the time Israel withdraws her armed forces from most of the Sinai, which will take place between three and nine months after the conclusion of the peace treaty.

The treaty is to be fully negotiated and signed no later than three months from now. Prime Minister Begin and President Sadat have now challenged each other to conclude the treaty even earlier.

This will be a wonderful Christmas present for the world. Complete withdrawal of all Israeli forces will take place no more than three years after the treaty has been signed.

While both parties are in complete agreement on the goals I have just described, there is one issue on which agreement has not been reached. Egypt states that agreement to remove Israeli settlements from Egyptian territory is a prerequisite for a peace treaty. Israel states that the issue of the Israeli settlements should be resolved during the peace negotiations.

Within two weeks, the Knesset will decide on the issue of the settlements. Our own government's position on this issue is well known and has been consistent. It is my strong hope that the question of Israeli settlements on Egyptian territory will not be the final obstacle to peace.

NONE OF US should underestimate the historic importance of what has been done. This is the first time that an Arab and an Israeli leader have signed a comprehensive framework for peace.

It contains the seeds of a time when the Middle East, with all its vast potential, may be a land of human richness and fulfillment, rather than of bitterness and conflict. No region of the world has greater natural and human resources — and nowhere have they been more heavily weighed down by hatred and war. These agreements hold out the real possibility that this burden might be lifted.

The Egyptian and Israeli people must recognize the tangible benefits that peace will bring, and support the decisions their leaders have made so that a secure and peaceful future can be achieved.

The American public must offer its full support to those who have difficult decisions still to make. What lies ahead for all of us is to recognize the statehood of President Sadat and Prime Minister Begin have shown and to others to follow their example have already invited the leaders of the Arab world to help in progress toward a comprehensive peace.

We must also join in an effort to bring to an end the conflict and suffering in Lebanon.

WE NEED to consult closely the Arab leaders, and I am pleased to say that King Hussein of Jordan and King Khaled of Saudi Arabia have now agreed to a Secretary (of State Cyrus Vance) who will be leaving tomorrow to explain to them the terms of the Camp David agreement, and to their support for the realization of the new hopes and dreams of the people of the Middle East.

For many years, the Middle East has been a textbook for pessimists. A demonstration that diplomatic genuity was no match for inhuman human conflicts. Today, we are privileged to see the change of the history — a chance that may be the way to peace. We have a challenge for peace because these two leaders found within themselves a willingness to work together to bring a lasting peace. For that, I hope I will share my prayer of thanks with my hope that the promise of this moment shall be fully realized.

The prayers at Camp David's name as those of the shepherd King David who prayed in the Psalm, Verse 8:

"With thou not revive us again, they people may rejoice in thee!"

"I will hear what God the Lord speak, for He will speak peace. His people and to His saints. But them not turn again to folly."
